ARMY OF THE RED CHEVRON ORGANIZED

SALT LAKE, May 18.—Marshall Breeden, a former Salt Lake and son of M. A. Breeden, former United States district attorney for Utah, is national adjutant of the "Army of the Red Chevron," an organization of men physically disqualified for active military service.

This new army of men is being launched in San Francisco, and a permanent organization has just been formed there, according to information received here. Mr. Breeden took a prominent part in the launching of the first organization, it is stated. The object of the new army is to give opportunity for the men who have been rejected for military duty to serve their country in other ways. It is planned to have these soldiers of the "Red Chevron" band themselves together for the purpose of bringing about uniform and concentrated work in the farms in vacation periods and to take up other work at home which will help to maintain the soldiers who are fighting at the front.

Members of the permanent national committee of the "Army of the Red Chevron" who are now in California are:

Dr. Alfred Abrams, national chairman; Dr. Charles Theo. Cutting, national vice chairman; Hugo D. Newhouse, Daniel A. Ryan, national captain in active command of the active members; Marshall Breeden, national adjutant; Jacob Schlusser; temporary vice adjutants, W. A. Bourne and E. J. Verneago.

Before they go much further war financiers are going to tackle the problem of how to get money to run the war by shutting down everything but the war. Experience is a fine school—but expensive.

DE WEESE SAYS HE IS INNOCENT

Reporter Interviews Doomed Man Who Is Cheerful-Lacks Creed and Doubts Hereafter.

(By Roscoe Ashworth)
SALT LAKE, May 20.—"De Weese is an enigma. He is as incomprehensible as a sphinx. I never knew a man to face his last hours with the same imperturbable good humor."

As soon as Warden George A. Storrs had finished addressing these words to me in his office at the state prison yesterday afternoon, an attendant entered, announcing that Howard De Weese, who is waiting death next Friday for the murder of his wife, was willing to grant an interview, provided I would quote him verbatim and would not camouflage his statements with imaginative highlights.

I gave a pledge that his request be religiously acceded to, and, ciceroned by Warden Storrs, I went to De Weese's death cell for the first interview with the condemned man since the death watch was placed over him. The sight of De Weese in his steel cage, five days before the date of his execution, strikingly bore out the warden's assertion. He was all cheerfulness, buoyancy and vivacity. His spirited but tranquil goodnaturedness was almost uncanny. If he bore any grudging thoughts in his heart, he hid them throughout the conversation in smiles and affability.

"I'm a little shy of newspaper men," he said, cordially shaking me by the hand. "You've got such vivid imaginations and then you like to play things up so. If I don't give you an interview, you write some sort of a story anyway; and if I do you add the highlights and people get exaggerated and distorted ideas of me. I'm almost afraid to talk to you. Do you write 'sob stuff'?"

De Weese's Fate Now in Scales.

I assured him that wasn't my "line," that I was assigned by the city editor to get a human interest story of plain statement of fact, showing the mental attitude of a man deliberately preparing for a journey to the unexplored beyond, and that it was the psychological moment for such a story, while the Goddess of Fortune, personified by the board of pardons, was holding his fate in the judgment scales.

He was sympathetically struck with my mission, sloughed all his reserve

THEY GAVE HER VINOL AFTER SICKNESS

It Completely Restored Her Strength

Brooklyn, N. Y.—"Pneumonia left me weak and tired, with pains under my shoulder blades, a bad cough and no appetite. Five bottles of Vinol restored my strength and health. I gained in weight and my cough disappeared."—Mrs. B. Richter, 132 Menhass St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

This is because Vinol is a constitutional cod liver and iron remedy which creates an appetite, aids digestion, enriches the blood and in this natural manner restores health and strength. Formula on every bottle. Show it to your doctor. He knows. Culley Drug Co., Ogden, and at the best drug store in every town and city in the country.—Advertisement.

Warden Storrs and myself to a seat beside him on the cot in his six-foot cell.

The appearance of his prison abode was in perfect harmony with the and with debonair suavity invited cheerfulness he purveyed. Two bowls filled with spring flowers smiled from one corner of the room. The walls were embellished with pictures of the gladsome faces of movie actresses, which had been placed there by his predecessor, but which he allowed to remain.

In one corner in an improvised frame was pinned the picture of his wife, Mrs. DeWeese, a reproduction of a photograph she had taken when 18 years of age, he said.

Calendars Are Weirily Marked. But the two most conspicuous objects which fastened the attention of Warden Storrs and myself were two calendars hung at intervals on the wall opposite his bed. Upon each of these the 24th day was ominously enveloped in a circle marked by a black pencil.

Thus DeWeese, self-confessed Raffles, has passed a month, deliberately and resolutely reminding himself by means of his wife's picture and the weirdly marked calendars of the fateful day when he will embark for the land of shadows, expecting to find, perhaps, a sweet oblivious antidote for life's fitful fevers.

"Have you any religious convictions?" I asked him.

"I can't subscribe to any of the creeds," he replied. "I have studied a dozen or more of them. Maybe there's a God; maybe there's good; maybe there's a hereafter—I don't know. If there is a God and a hereafter, I know I shall be given different judgment from that I have received here. If the grave means forgetfulness and annihilation, then what's the odds? That's my religion, and that's why I'm cheerful. I have faith and I know I'm right. If I had committed the crime for which I was convicted, I would be so scared I shouldn't know what to do."

"How do you pass the time?" I inquired.

"Reading," he answered, and pointed to several books on Mormonism which were lying on his table.

"Interested in Mormon Faith."

"What do you find in Mormonism that appeals to you?"

"I couldn't say exactly. I haven't given the subject very profound study. I'm interested, that's all."

"DeWeese, how did you first become addicted to the drug habit?"

"I'm glad you brought up the subject. People picture me as a demoralized 'hop' fiend. I wish you'd straighten that matter up. Here are the facts. I began to use drugs in San Francisco in 1909. I used them for a year and a half and quit, and haven't used them since."

"Do you attribute your being in your present position to the use of drugs?"

"Not a bit of it. They had nothing to do with my present position, I tell you."

"DeWeese, what is your attitude toward your father?"

"I suppose it is the same as the attitude of any other child toward its father," was all he said. He admitted that in his life he had covered discretion with a coat of folly.

Evidently DeWeese thought I had my turn as an examiner long enough and he took the initiative and asked me where I was superstitious.

Figures and a Handkerchief. "Do you believe in unlucky numbers? Listen. Here's something which may interest you. Take the numbers 3 and 13, for example. When my trial began I was 31, which is 13 backwards. Thirteen jurymen tried my case. One died, you remember. My appeal to the supreme court was set for February 13. It was then that I signed my will."

"Have you any statement, in particular, you want to make?" I asked him.

"None, except that I want to express my appreciation for the excellent treatment I have received in Warden Storrs' hotel here. It's been great. I couldn't have wished for anything better. Believe me, I appreciate it. I've gained 12 pounds in the month I've been here."

Here I inquired of DeWeese concerning a brilliantly colored and pictured handkerchief which was pinned flat upon the wall.

"What's that for?"

"I've already willed that to somebody."

"To whom?"

"That's my secret."

"Couldn't you be prevailed upon to tell it?"

"No. But I'll tell you this much—when they get it, it will have four holes in the center of it."

And he smiled good humoredly.

ALEX RIRIE REGAINS MONEY PAID ON A FARM

Judge A. W. Agee has just handed down a very important decision pertaining to the purchase and sale of land, in deciding the case of Alexander Ririe vs. Clarence W. Brooks and Mary Brooks, which was tried in the district court last week.

The plaintiff, Mr. Ririe, was desirous of buying a farm and last January while the snow was on the ground, was shown the farm of defendants at Farr West, and representations were made to him that the land was first class No. 1 soil and free from alkali and minerals, and that there was a water right with it with an abundant supply of water. Mr. Ririe relied upon said representations, and purchased the land for $12,000, and paid $2,000 down in cash, traded his city property valued at $6,000, and agreed to pay $4,000 more in yearly payments, and moved upon the premises about the middle of March. The snow remained on the ground until the latter part of March so that Mr. Ririe could not examine the soil, but when the snow melted off he ascertained that the land was not first class No. 1 soil and that practically all of it was mineralized and full of alkali, and there was not sufficient water to irrigate one-fifth of the land, whereupon he promptly notified defendants Brooks, and demanded cancellation of the trade and a return of his property and money, which the Brooks refused to do, whereupon Ririe, through his attorneys, Chee & Stine, instituted action in the district court for restitution, which was heard last week.

The case attracted more than ordinary attention and many witnesses were called to prove the character of the land involved and representations made, and Judge Agee in a written opinion, filed this morning, rendered his decision, finding in favor of plaintiff Alexander Ririe, and against the defendants Brooks, requiring the defendants to repay to Ririe the $2000 cash received and reconvey to him the property received in trade.
